The Maurice R. Hilleman Early-Stage Career Investigator Award

The Maurice R. Hilleman Early-Stage Career Investigator Award recognizes individuals in the early stages of their careers in any field of vaccinology.

The awardee's institution will receive $10,000 to support his/her research and the awardee will be recognized during the National Foundation for Infectious Diseases (NFID) luncheon at the 18th Annual Conference on Vaccine Research and will present a 10 minute summary of his/her research. In addition, the awardee will receive a travel stipend and complimentary registration for the 2016 Annual Conference on Vaccine Research.

Eligibility: At the time of submission, applicants must be currently enrolled, recently completed training (e.g. internship, residency, fellowship, postdoctoral training, or similar educational program), or be within four years of having earned their advanced degree (masters or doctoral);

To Apply: Applicants must submit an abstract to the 18th Annual Conference on Vaccine Research and select "Hilleman Award (Poster Only)" on the online submission site.